Bigfoot, Terror In The Woods

Synopsis

I had a crazy uncle, like most everyone does. Many of his stories were about a big hairy monster that lived in the woods behind his cabin in the woods. He called the monster Bigfoot, a name I thought he made up when I was eight years old because I hadn't heard the word before that. He had a Bigfoot encounter and was worried about abduction and attack all the time. My story takes place while I was in college, but it started way before that when Uncle Chip was still alive.

Customer Reviews

This is a good short read. Technically there are quite a few grammatical errors, but I still enjoyed the overall story. It almost feels like you're reading the author's diary. The emotions are raw and you can feel the author's fear. I thought there was a little too much background information and I felt like the author included some strange unnecessary details. Overall, it was a good read and you can relive a terrifying experience with the author. The ending was kind of abrupt, but the author tells a good tale. The story is believable and I would absolutely recommend it to any Bigfoot aficionado. The grammar and lack of editing were the big downfall for me, but I guess that just adds to the rawness and believability of the story.

I like the fact that the author tells the story of this encounter with no embellishment. Just a straight forward, take it or leave it approach. I, for one, believe her. Good read if you have 20 min or so.

This is a good read for a afternoon weekend. Two college girls go back to be of the girls forest cabin she use to go to in visiting a uncle. Seeing it as an adult brought a shock but what came later that evening shocked them both for a lifetime. A short story n a encounter with seeing Bigfoot.

Man, o man! I really wish I could see one! I don't think they were there to harm you, maybe they were using the trailer as a sleeping place and they've come back to find it changed and was curious. Their animals and animals are very curious! I know you were frightened but remember next time their more scared of us then we are of them!
