I respect Michael Ford and value his knowledge and input. To me, he is the leading source of knowledge for the Left-hand path today. When I first discovered his works, I was thrilled I should say ecstatic. There were not many works on dark magic and sorcery that surrounded demonic or satanic imagery and mythology when I was younger. The only works I could find were the demonic bible and the satanic bible. Other than that the other books that utilized the invocation or evocation of demons made use of the names of God. Mostly because of fear of the demons harming the magicians summoning them. Such as the works attributed to King Solomon or they had very strange practices you had to do in order to gain the power they promised you. Such as putting three black beans in specific locations inside the head of a dead man and this was to give you invisibility. I find it interesting if you were going to summon demons to aid you in your magic, give you power and make all your worldly desires possible why would you fear them. I would think they would be an ally and would treat them as such. This is done in Michael Fords works rather than being some monster that needs to be controlled they are a companion in a way. You give them something, and they give you something. I do not think Michael Ford meant for his demons to be looked at as real more like psychological aspects of the mind, but that is how I see them. I enjoyed reading the bible of the adversary I liked learning about the history of the devil and more importantly the part on Yatukih sorcery. I found this method of sorcery quite favorable and inexpensive. However, I have a few issues the first one is that on page 14 there is what appears to be a pledge. This pledge though different reminds me of the Sith code from the Star Wars universe.
