Coach McKeefery is not only a great professional, but an absolutely world-class person. Through leading by example and direct contributions, he is truly one of the most influential coaches in strength and conditioning today. While he is a master of the training process, where he truly shines is in his understanding of the human condition. His ability to engage athletes, create trust and empower them to own their training journey is truly second to none. He not only brings this art to coaching, but also in his approach to coach development. Ask any intern, GA or assistant that has worked with Coach McKeefery, and they will tell you that coach knows how to challenge and empower you to be your best. I believe that there is no better title than "CEO Strength Coach" for this book. Coach McKeefery addresses topics that are often times overlooked, yet paramount to the success of any business owner, personal trainer or strength coach trying to build a sustainable system designed to upgrade their client/athletes lives. Through Coach's "Journey" you will learn about the path that has given the human performance field one of the most important strength coaches of our time. Through his personal narrative you will likely find similarities with your own path, which makes the following sections that much more powerful, as he has overcome issues that you have likely faced in your own career. In section two, appropriately called "The Technician," you learn how to build the foundation of your program. One of the most important lessons any new - or experienced - strength coach can learn is the concept of using a "principle based not philosophy based" approach to coaching.
